Preface

All of the essays in this book have been written in dialogue with others. I am very grateful to all those who have discussed with me many of the issues developed here: in particular, I would like to thank Isobel Armstrong, Derek Attridge, Gargi Bhattacharrya, Rachel Bowlby, Jonathan Dollimore, Terry Eagleton, Maud Ellmann, Robin Fiddian, Ken Hirschkop, Christina Howells, Kadiatu Kanneh, John Knight, Rodney Livingstone, Laura Marcus, David Norbrook, Richard Rand, Jacqueline Rose, Nicholas Royle, Jonathan Sawday, Allon White (for whom there is another note elsewhere) and Clair Wills. I want too to express my gratitude to those students who have worked through with me in seminars many of the ideas developed in this book. Antony Easthope read the manuscript with great care and made some very useful suggestions; I am grateful to him for his scrupulous criticisms. Anita Roy has been an exemplary editor, for which much thanks. Some of these essays were written in the context of work on The Oxford Literary Review: I thank Geoffrey Bennington for his stimulating collaboration during the course of our long labour—now ended—on the OLR. Homi Bhabha as always has been a challenging and rewarding reader, and I thank him warmly once more. Susan Matthews and Matthew Meadows have given constant sustenance. My lasting gratitude to Badral, Maryam, and Yasmine, for teaching me what is worthwhile. Finally, this book is dedicated to my mother, Mary Young, a son's small gift towards love's irredeemable debt.
